GREECE DOUBTS IF TURKEY CAN PAY FOR VESSEL

Minister in London Says One Million Pounds Has Been Turned Over to Brazil, but Two More Must Be Found

BREACH IS ALLEGED

Porte's Act Declared to Be in Violation of Agreement and Calling for Interference by Powers if Hostilities Threaten

Special Cable to the Monitor from its European Bureau

LONDON-With the permission of the Greek minister in London, the Monitor is able to give the views of the government in Athens respecting the purchase of the Brazilian ironclad and the question raised by that act. The Greek government is absolutely unmoved by this purchase, partially because it is still regarded as doubtful whether Turkey will be able to raise the money to pay the final instalments. At present £1,000,000 has been paid on account, but this million was raised at a ruinous rate of interest and practically two more millions will have to be found.

The £1,000,000 which has already been paid constitutes a breach of Turkey's undertaking to the great powers that all sums raised by loan should be devoted to the settlement of her outstanding debts. At present the pay of the Turkish public services is five months in arrears and the money received from the Perier Bank should have been devoted to the settlement of these arrears. Even in the event of the final instalments being paid, the question of handing over the vessel to Turkey would still remain

The whole incident was regarded in Greece as an exhibition of "swollen head" on the part of the Porte, resulting from the fact that it had been permitted to retain Adrianople when it was retaken from Bulgaria.

Asked what reliance was to be placed upon the statements in the Tribuna of Rome that Greece was making evacuation of that part of Epirus which was to Special Representative Reaches settlement of the Aegean islands, M. Gennadius explained that he had no information on this point but that during the whole negotiations Greece had acted in absolute loyalty to all the undertakings she had made to the powers

She had placed the question of the islands entirely in the hands of the powers, and though she would regret return to Turkey of any islands now held by her, such as Imbros and Tenedos, the population of which was even more purely Greek than that of the mainland, still she was prepared to agree loyally to the powers' decision.

Liberal Housing Plans Are Told by British Minister

BRITISH WAGES NEED ADVANCE SAYS PREMIER

Mr. Asquith Declares Pay of Laborer Is Inadequate to Meet the Conditions of a Decent and Humane Existence

LAND REFORM IS TOPIC

(Special to the Monitor)

LONDON-As already reported in the Monitor cable despatches, a dinner was given recently at the National Liberal Club by Percy Illingworth, chief ministerial whip, to inaugurate the work of the Central Land and Housing Council.

The council has been formed to carry out the new Liberal land campaign inaugurated some time ago by Mr. Lloyd George in his speech at Reading. The guests numbered over 400 and included a large number of cabinet ministers and subordinate members of the government.

The prime minister was the principal speaker and in the course of his reply to the toast, "The Prime Minister and His Majesty's Ministers," he said that although the general lines upon which the government proposed to proceed in dealing with the land question had already been expounded by the chancellor of the exchequer, nevertheless it might be convenient, now that the active campaign was about to open, that he should summarize their intentions and the probable effect of their proposals.

The land question in town and coun try was, Mr. Asquith said, in a real sense one: nevertheless for the sake of clear ness he proposed to deal with them separately. Going on to give an instance, Mr. Burns points out that the county councils have been furnished by the legislature with the most powerful lever for obtaining an improvement in the housing conditions, in backward districts, in section 10 in the act of 1909. This section gives them the power to complain to the Local Government Board where the local authority has not done its

Such a complaint would place the central authority in a position to take effective action, but "so far as I know," Mr. Burns writes, "on only two occa sions during the past three years, has At your dealers the county council seen its way to make use of this power. On the other hand, thanks to the encouragement and pressure from the central authority, rural district councils alone have undertaken or submitted to me, during the same period, over 120 schemes for providing new houses for their districts."

The master of Polwarth said that VESTED IN COUNTY COUNCILS wherever it was possible they were now introducing a system of associated work. and better results were obtained as regards work and as regards supervision, and more work was done. In all the best equipped prisons at the present time there were large workshops where the prisoners could work together.

The first prison reform he said, was to keep as many people out of prison as possible, and that led them to consider substitutes for imprisonment. By far the larger proportion of the people whe went to prison at the present time were sentenced, not to imprisonment, but to pay a fine. In Scotland 41 per cent of those sentenced last year to pay a fine, went to prison in default of payment.

As to the question of giving time for payment of fine, wherever a man had a fixed residence and was in regular employment it ought to be possible to allow him to pay by instalments of fine. He had ascertained that it was perfectly legal to accept instalments of fine. It was worth considering whether it could not be made legal to arrest a portion of man's wages, leaving enough for his wife and family to live upon, and to pava fine which was in reality a debt to the state. As to the question of probation he thought there was plenty of room for extending the principle of probation.

One section where manufacturing flourished in an old-fashioned way in earlier years is now spoken of as "the deserted village." That locality has interest for residents and visitors because of quaint and interesting associations.

Perhaps if Crane Bonnell had been less progressive, or if early New Jersey had not rather rushed her industrial enterprises, or if Summit had not been seen by a group of men who believed in it as a real estate venture, Summit's old industries might have overtopped the commuter's desire for an undisturbed place of residence. PRETTY DESIGNS IN CROSS-STITCH

There are patterns giving crossstitch designs that can be worked on innumerable little articles for children, says the Denver Times. There is one such pattern, of the sort that is ironed on the material on which it is to be worked, which has 13 motifs or designs, and three repeats of each of them. There is an elephant design, a giraffe, a cat, a hen and chickens, various sorts of tree and flower designs and other things which interest children. Little aprons for play hours can be made of heavy linen or cotton, bound about the edges with colored tape, and then worked in cross-stitch kittens. Bedspreads or carriage robes or slumber robes can all be worked in the same way, Bureau and table covers and pillow covers can also be cross-stitched in some attractive animal design, and will be sure to find favor in childish eyes.

OULTRY raisers and fanciers who have exhibition birds or stock and dealers who have coops, feeders, etc., to sell, would do well to advertise them at this time. The Boston Poultry Show opens Jan. 13. Those interested in poultry and in the show are unusually attentive to any recommendations and the advertising of whatever you have that will interest them is particularly timely now.

The Classified Poultry Section of the Monitor offers an excellent opportunity to get the desired results at a low rate. Give us the facts and an idea of the price you wish to pay and we will gladly prepare your advertisements. The cost of this advertising, which appears on Thursday of each week, will be, per line:

MUSEUM GETS

ANOTHER COROT

Most recent among the acquisitions of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts is the "Landscape" by Corot, which has just been placed on exhibition in the first modern art room. The painting is considered an excellent example of Corot's work, and is in the dull greens, characteristic of that artist. It is a bequest to the museum from Francis Bartlett.

STANDING OF COLLEGES

NEW YORK-To the University of Pennsylvania chess team today belongs the honor of winning the first college championship of 1914 following the taking of the Triangular College Chess League title at the home of the Brooklyn Chess Club Thursday. The final score was: University of Pennsylvania 111/2, Cornell 101/2 and Brown 2,

With the championship went the permanent possession of the third I. L. Rice trophy, which, previously had been won by the Quakers in 1909 and 1912. Cornell had won it in 1910 and tied with Pennsylvania the following year. Pennsylvania's winning total yesterday was 111/2 points out of a possible 16, while Cornell was placed second with 101/2 and Brown a poor third with 2 points.

In the games of the final round Cornell and Pennsylvania, as in the third round, and Pennsylvania, as in the third round, made equal scores, each college adding Dec. 13 left matters as they were, so far table, where they have been ever since 21/2 points to its total. Baker Plays Star Game for Orange and Black-Captain Kuhn Scores Four Goals

Princeton defeated the Toronto Uniersity hockey seven at the Boston Arena Thursday night by the score of 5 to 1 in a fast and exciting contest that was featured by forward passing and team work on both sides. H. A. H. Baker of the Orange and Black team was the star of the evening, playing a most brilliant game, and he was ably assisted by Captain Kuhn, who scored four of the goals for Princeton. Princeton showed better staying powers than the Canadians and had the game under control at all times.

The Toronto seven, fresh from its win of a series in New York over Queens and Ottawa colleges from Canada, was looked upon by many as a combination which would be able to hold Baker. This the Canadians failed to do, the elusive work was as skilful as ever, and his shooting was perfect.

The wonderful guarding of the Princeton net by Winants kept the Toronto seven from counting. Winants was busy at all times, but was cool, collected, and knocked aside an avalanche of shots which poured on him in the first half. Toronto played a hard game, and was very fast, but the back checking, and speed of the Princetonians made it almost imposible to win a direct line to FEDERAL LEAGUE the net. The Canadians' star performers were Aird, Jupp and Bailey in the forward line and Laird at goal. Aird and Jupp got away well several times, only to find G. Peacock and Emmons ready to check them and make it possible for the Princeton forwards to rush in and take the puck. The work of Laird at goal was good. His position was bombarded continually, and but for his work the Princeton total would have been much larger. The summary:

of ever-present, eternal good. American Indians' Larder

Praising a little book of the outdoors world as one that was not made but grew of itself, a critic in the New York Sun cites Kirkham's "North and South" as recording many careful bits of wood lore, new and old. He shows that to the camper among the pines in South Carolina there is no tyranny of the kitchen. Beans and bacon and potatoes take the place of the culinary devices of effete urban civilization, with a fish out of the lake, berries and nuts from the woods or a mess of mushrooms from the field for variety. But consider the Indian, how ingeniously and comprehensively he tapped the storehouse that for modern man has no larder value. He ground acorns, extracted the tannin by filtering water through the meal, and made nutritious porridge or cakes. Chestnuts and hickory nuts were similarly useful and from butternuts and walnuts he got-oil. Arrowhead, bulrush, jack-in-thepulpit, spatter-dock and the wild yellow lily fed him with their tuberous roots, which he knew how to disburden of too acrid a quality. Seeds of the wild sunflower he comminuted and made into dough. Wild rice was a staple. The list of weeds he used as greens is extensive and to us a curiosity: Bellwort, burdock, chickweed, clover, dandelion, dock, ferns, cat-tail, lamb's quarters, Spanish lettuce, marsh marigold, deergrass, cress, mustard, nettle, cow parsnip, pigweed, plantain, pokeweed, evening primrose, purslane and vetch-a surprising catalogue.

New Nationalism Explains French Struggle

THE political struggle which is going on today in France is frequently dismissed by the superficial observer as a battle between persons. He will tell you that, for a generation, King Stork has succeeded King Log, and King Log King Stork, very much as, in the annals of another country, it used to be said an Amurath to an Amurath succeeds. In the present emergency, he will explain, two champions of more than ordinary distinction occupy the lists. On the one hand there is the President of the republic, M. Poincare, on the other the ministry breaker, M. Clemenceau, also endearingly known as "the tiger." The fight, this time you are warned, will be to a finish, so far as the combatants are concerned, but the result, in its effect on social progress, will be precisely the same, no matter on which gladiator the voters turn down their thumbs. No doubt M. Poincare and M. Clemenceau are both "first-rate fighting men," but to suppose that their personalities represent the cause of the present discontent is ridiculous. They are themselves merely the expression of the underlying cause, and that cause is the clashing of what has been termed the new nationalism with the older republicanism. M. Poincare is convinced that the republic is so firmly grounded that the time has come when the conservative element may be admitted to some share in the government of the country. M. Clemenceau is no less certain that you cannot divorce monarchical conservatism from clericalism or militarism, and that the clerical leopard is no more capable of changing his spots than the lion of militarism of lying down with the anti-armament lamb. From M. Clemenceau's point of view, however, the dangers of the new nationalism may be generated as successfully under a presidential silk hat as under a crown. The army, he insists, has never yet been completely purged of the taint of autocratic clericalism, as witness the reinstatement, under a socialist minister, of the notorious Paty du Clam. If such things are possible under the green of scrutin d'arrondissement, what may not happen under the wood of scrutin de liste? So M. Clemenceau opposed, with all his strength, the election of M. Poincare to the presidency. He was beaten then, but he had his revenge a little later when he broke up the ministry of the President's political heir, M. Briand. Once again a friend of the President, M. Barthou became first minister, only to fall before the combinations of the ministry breaker. This time M. Poincare failed to find any one capable of forming a cabinet to carry on his policy. M. Doumergue, a nominee of the ministry breaker, became premier, but obviously only as a stop-gap. In a few months the battle will be fought out at the polls. The future of the new nationalism will be decided by the people.

Chicago Water Routes South and West

REPORTED intention of steamboat lines to compete actively with railroads in handling freight between Chicago and points to the south and west would seem to indicate impatience with the progress or want of progress of the general lakes-to-gulf movement. An outlet to the Mississippi and the Missouri on the west and to the gulf of Mexico on the south was promised with the completion of the Chicago drainage canal project. In fact it was mainly the prospect of a ship canal connection with the gulf that aroused public sentiment in behalf of that undertaking. It is now nearly thirty years since that enterprise was launched; it is fourteen years since the canal was opened to the flow of water from Lake Michigan, and while over $75,000,000 have been expended upon the work it is as far as ever from being, in any strict sense, a ship canal.

The plain, unvarnished record shows clearly that powerful antagonism has kept the lakes-to-gulf project in check. The Illinois Legislature in 1907 passed a joint resolution providing for submission to the voters of the state of an amendment to the constitution permitting the General Assembly to provide for the construction of a deep waterway from Lockport to Utica, and to authorize the issue of bonds to the amount of $20,000,000 for this purpose. This amendment was approved by a vote which showed how popular is the idea of a ship canal, the ballots cast in the affirmative being 692,522 as against 195,177 in the negative. Notwithstanding this, at the next regular session of the Legislature nothing was done toward pressing the project forward. It was to have been considered in the extra session of the winter of 1909-10, but no action was taken. In the regular session of 1911 a waterway bill was passed by the Senate, but action in the House was prevented by rulings of the speaker. Another extra session, called among other things for the purpose of acting upon this matter, adjourned before accomplishing anything. Under Governor Dunne it is thus far still in statu quo.

But private enterprise has been working steadily toward the point of utilizing such waterway facilities as already exist with the view of developing a carrying trade. Kansas City enterprise has also brought about improvements in the Missouri river. There is no attempt to minimize the obstacles that present themselves, but when the project has been subjected to all reasonable discounts, it is still held, by the promoters of the organized lines to the west and south, that savings of from 20 to 30 per cent on freight rates can be made by shippers over the water routes. If this can be done in the face of hidden and open opposition, in the face of a too visible political indifference to popular demand, and in the face of numerous obstacles resulting from imperfect facilities in water depth and connections, it must appear to the most casual observer that greater things still might be expected were hindrances of various kinds compelled to give place to helps. All friends of better distribution must wish the new undertakings success.

UNDER the new aboard-ship educational system in the United States navy knowledge should so increase among the able-bodied seamen that they will in the future recognize as little occasion for dreading numerals as for dreading dreadnoughts

Keeping the Household Accounts

INTRODUCED into the recent holiday trade were a number of useful novelties having relation to the duties of the housewife. One of these is particularly worthy of attention. It is simply a neatly and ornamentally bound little kitchen order book. This book is intended to be kept constantly within reach of the housekeeper, and all of her orders to the butcher, baker and candlestick maker are to be entered therein, whether these orders are given to the wagon man at the back door, or sent in by telephone, or spoken over the counter in the course of a personal visit to the shops. Nothing could be more modest than the manner in which this little book enters upon an effort toward a great reform. Its covers are not more delicate in their blue and pink coloring than is the hint they convey to the person of the house who spends the money earned by the breadwinner.

From time immemorial husbands have been trying to impress upon wives the extravagance as well as the absurdity of the practise of allowing others to keep their accounts. Thousands of wives have promised amendment and have undertaken at intervals to systematize matters, but generally speaking, the keeping of kitchen accounts has been done for the family by those who furnish the family supplies. It is not so much a question of mercantile honesty that is involved here as it is a question of incorrect method in the home, and one which affects every item of domestic economy. The keeping of household accounts would return dividends if it did nothing more than to show the housewife the current rate of purchase and consumption, enabling her to put a necessary check upon

Whether or not the little kitchen account holiday novelty shall be the means of encouraging the simplest form of household bookkeeping it is impossible to say. It should, however, in these progressive times, be soon possible to say that women in general are moving out of some of the old and costly grooves in home management and taking up with processes that cannot fail to be helpful not only to themselves but to their families and to society. The little kitchen "blotter," properly used, will be a beginning in the right direction. It is not difficult to see how it might easily be the means of bringing about savings that would take care of many holiday expenditures a year hence.

ONE of the most needed lines of judicial interpretation in the United States at the present time is a series of decisions marking the limits of invasion of privacy by the press. The temporary glamour of the pecuniary success won by metropolitan journalists who have been unscrupulous in their methods has led to lowering of ideals by owners and editors bent on profits more than on rendering social service or gaining public esteem.

Because of this declension in standards, journalism as a calling suffers in reputation, and gross indignities are suffered by persons whose rights of domicile and privacy are daily attacked with mingled contempt and brutality.

Courts

Defining

Limits of

Publicity

A recent court decision, awarding damages to a person whose face had been incorrectly portrayed throughout the country in motion picture exhibitions, indicates that ethical questions involving personal rights are present in administration of this vast new business that now is rivaling the press as an agent of publicity. Any one at all conversant with the devices to which journals of a certain type stoop in order to obtain photographs of persons whose names figure in current news must find some consolation in any judicial decisions that affirm the right of persons to exercise proprietary rights in photographs that depict them. Already law has put an end to free use by advertisers of portraits of unconsenting persons when these pictures are used as trade brands. Will it some day similarly protect civilians and officials, the renowned and the humble, from pitiless news column publicity that has no social justification? Before the latter, of course, private desires, preferences and rights have to give way.

When the day comes that society really settles down to consider seriously some flagrant aspects of journalism run on the individualistic basis, it will, we think, interfere to protect the selfrespecting many from the super-inquisitive few who coin gain from impertinent intrusions.

PACKAGES of fifty pounds in weight may now be sent through the mails for a distance not to exceed 150 miles for 54 cents in postage, but they "must not exceed seventy-two inches in length and girth combined." This will set many persons to weighing and measuring their suit cases.

The Heroic in the Industrial World

FORTUNATELY for many communities in the United States, the display of the sculpture of Constantin Meunier, the Belgian, is not to be monopolized by one or two of the eastern art and wealth centers. Over a considerable area of the country, and to many urban centers, this artist's striking plastic work depicting "the heroic in the industrial world" will go with its message of the dignity, serenity and nobility, as well as the more tragic aspects of human toil. This Belgian, being a lover of mankind and essentially democratic in his own nature, has sought material for self-expression precisely where the great always go-to the people and to the sort of people who are fundamental in that organizing, creative, wealth-creating task of contemporary society, namely, harnessing nature to the service of man. Sowers and harvesters, miners, masons, puddlers in mills and longshoremen, find themselves depicted in symbolic yet realistic and enduring bronze. Their day's work was watched by the loving yet penetrating eye of an artist who saw not only the outer physical form of the hero, but also what was within, and conceived and executed his plastic record in terms of truth, as did Millet using a different medium and working among a much more rural folk. In Meunier one finds the poetry and the drama of contemporary urban industrialism; and probably nowhere will this collection of his sculpture have a more critical audience awaiting it than in Pittsburgh, to which city it goes early in the scheduled tour.

A word of praise is in order for the steadily pursued policy of the Allbright art gallery in Buffalo, by which collections of the first rank are brought to the United States and given their widest range of educational influence through an interurban circuit display.

WHAT has every appearance of a wise and comprehensive measure for fire prevention in the metropolitan district has been worked out by the special committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce. There is a merit in the way it was produced and a breadth in its application that command approval, quite aside from the features of the proposed bill. It is a product of the policy of enlisting all interests in the business of improving conditions, which is so familiar now in the chamber's proceedings that it easily escapes comment—the mercantile interest in this problem being assumed not to be apart from the real estate interest and the labor interest, with the result that the organizations that represent all of them are called into the consideration of the problem and the drafting of the proposed law. Its recognition of the metropolitan district as a unit is an extension to a new item of the rule that may well be expected to be applied to more and more of the common interests of the group in which Boston is but the center.

Of the bill that results from this well-balanced consideration, it is to be said that it appears to be a highly practicable and valuable addition to the organization of the district. It undertakes to provide a common protection against the flimsy construction of buildings on plans that are objectionable on public grounds, the oversight of all construction or installation where carelessness may be evidenced in the exposure of materials to fire, the regulation of storage of explosives and combustibles, and puts these and like duties in a board whose first concern will be to make the provisions of the bill effective. The bill necessarily gives to the fire prevention commission great power as to entrance upon the projects of builders and upon private premises with the authority that springs from the necessity of common protection against the carelessness of workers and the cupidity of owners.

Boston has the instruction of her own experience as to the necessity of an extreme measure of authority and watchfulness and the conclusions are good for all her neighbors. For that matter, they are good for the whole state and the law will do well to provide that it may be accepted elsewhere while compulsory within the district that has the most emphatic need.

UNITED STATES INDIAN COMMISSIONER CATO SELLS has been in conference with agents of the bureau which he directs, planning for a stiff campaign against persons who, contrary to law, traffic in intoxicants with Indians as purchasers. To charge that the government itself, through its agents, has been party to this process of getting income by ruining a race, the commissioner is especially sensitive; and he plans to make even the seeming truth of the criticism impossible hereafter by the rigidity with which penalties will be enforced on subordinates who connive with liquor

The bureau now has the largest appropriation for this purpose ever put at its disposal. Recent court decisions have extended the jurisdiction of its agents. The new commissioner is a man of will and of resource. He is taking counsel of agents as to practical aspects of the problem. When he sees his way straight, amid legal tangles and local prejudices, he is likely to act in a way that will annoy and scatter the folk that, like parasites, always have hung about the federal reservations, often subverting much that church and school have done for the Indians.

The reservation agent, in the fight he is officially ordered to make against the liquor dealer, governs his course far too often by his own point of view with respect to temperance. But even when working in closest harmony with Washington for abstinence as a goal to be attained by the tribe, he is handicapped by the lack of opinion favorable to that view among whites who are nearest to the reservation and who traffic with it. Often it is a solitary fight that is waged, with officials of the law itself arrayed against the honest and temperate agent working to create sobriety and thrift. A drunken Indian can be stripped of his belongings, personal and real. So aught that tends to keep him away from "fire water," is combated by corrupt white neighbors of the red man.

Sight of a few swiftly tried and adequately punished perverters of the manhood of the nation's wards, it is argued, would have a deterrent effect. If Commissioner Sells has his way there will be some prisoners at the bar ere long.

DARTMOUTH COLLEGE is fortunate in having a theater plant provided for it at an early stage of its experimentation with the drama. To the academic community, to the village of Hanover, N. H., and to adjacent rural regions, this coming temple of the fine arts -but especially the histrionic-will mean more than can be foreseen now. Older sectional and college traditions ran counter to any such commerce with recreation, esthetics,

Theaters for College Dramatics and the imaginative sides of life. But times have changed. Experiments in play-giving by students have been tried and have not proved detrimental to student or village morals. Broadening of the courses of literature to include study of the rise and evolution of the play has not weakened in any way admiration for other forms of verse and prose. The work of planning for, producing and appraising student-given plays has widened college interest in the community and deepened community interest in the college. Not surprising, therefore, is the decision to use the unrestricted gift of $100,000 by Mr. Robinson to give "town and gown" a theater with standards set and protected by persons of culture who have ideals for both stage and community. There are other academic centers, much longer habituated than Hanover to the notion of union between college and stage, that may look on somewhat wistfully at the outlook for Dartmouth's professors and students. Their duty now is to imitate. Harvard alumni, for instance, have reason to ponder whether, in view of the record of Professor Baker and his students and the many organizations that now provide opportunities for playwriting and play-producing at Harvard and at Radcliffe, they have not obligations that must soon be met by the provision of a university theater. If such a building were adequately equipped, it might serve not only the Harvard and Radcliffe constituencies but that larger and evergrowing one in Boston which is willing to support an enterprise that by some is called a civic theater and by others a repertory
